About Antiques Week

Sixty-six years ago, a handful of New Hampshire dealers set up a little show in one of the conference rooms of the New Hampshire Highway Hotel in Concord. The show grew and soon took over the ballroom of the hotel. Russell Carrell was hired to manage the event and under his direction it became one of the most popular events in the Northeast. Eventually, the show moved to Manchester, New Hampshire where it is still held. The popularity of the show enticed other promoters to present shows in the area, and Antiques Week in New Hampshire was born. Today, Antiques Week in New Hampshire had become a destination for dealers and collectors from all over the United States and beyond. In addition to the shows, there are a multitude of shops to browse while attending the shows.

Welcome to New Hampshire Antiques Week!
